CORRESPONDENCE Phone: +6281347462233 E-mail: Permanasinga92@gmail.com	The research method that the author uses is qualitative with an analytical descriptive approach, as well as data grouping techniques using three methods namely observation, interviews as well as documentation. When withdrawing data sources, the authors used a purposive sampling technique.
	The results of the study show that certainty regarding road access for the removal of coal and palm oil is still not swift because they are still being given permits to use public roads. Also, the legal impact on the use of public roads for the transportation of mining products in the Tenggarong Seberang District area is still uncertain and swift, but if an accident occurs which causes harm to other public road users, the transport must be responsible for the losses incurred.
