Abstract

Abstract: This research examines President Joe Biden's immigration reforms towards Muslim citizens, contrasting them with the policies of his predecessor, Donald Trump. Trump's administration enacted controversial immigration restrictions on several Muslim-majority countries, which faced criticism for being discriminatory and contrary to American values. In his 2020 election campaign, Biden criticized these policies and pledged to implement more inclusive immigration reforms. Using a qualitative descriptive case study, the research analyzes Biden's policies between 2021 and 2023, drawing on primary and secondary sources. The findings reveal that Biden's administration successfully reversed many of Trump's immigration policies, particularly those seen as discriminatory towards Muslims. Key reforms include changes to the USRAP program, Refugee Resettlement initiatives, and the use of humanitarian parole. These reforms aim to align U.S. immigration policy with constitutional principles and American values, while also improving the country's image as a welcoming nation for immigrants.
