Aji Ridha Tiara Mawarni<sup>1</sup>

Abstract: Australia, the United Kingdom, and the United States (AUKUS) is a regional defense pact initiated by three major countries in the world, namely Australia, the United Kingdom, and the United States. On September 15, 2021, the idea of AUKUS was also formed to focus on cutting-edge technologies in the field of security and defense, particularly in the development of quantum technology. The cooperation also has a plan that will involve information exchange, industrial capacity development, and can be mutually beneficial in developing the security industrial base. The AUKUS pact itself is expected to enhance collective capabilities in the security sector, especially in the mission of preventing Chinese expansionism, especially in the Indo-Pacific region. From the United States' point of view, AUKUS is seen as a strategy of the United States to maximize its dominance in international relations, particularly regarding competition between the United States and China, through the achievement of its power. The purpose of this study is to determine China's strategy in responding to the formation of the AUKUS pact.

This research is a type of qualitative research using descriptive research methods, data collection techniques using literature studies whose data sources are secondary data sources because they are obtained through books, journals and also the internet. In addition, this research uses Neuman and Balmer's Power theories, which are used to identify existing problems so as to reach the stage of making decisions.

The results of the study found that China's strategy in responding to the establishment of the AUKUS pact is to carry out a Speech Act such as open criticism to emphasize that the AUKUS agreement is harmful to every party. This is also supported by China's strong statement that the agreement between the three countries is a new model of Western provocation. China considers AUKUS to be a threat to regional security, especially in the Indo-Pacific region. China's military modernization has also been strengthened by aggressive military actions with its closest ally, Russia.
